View of the Mauritshuis

From house to museum
In the centre of The Hague, directly adjacent to the government buildings on the Hofvijver, the mansion of Johan Maurits, Count of Nassau-Siegen, governor-general of Dutch Brazil, arose in about 1640. The strictly classical building was designed and built by Jacob van Campen and Pieter Post, the two most important Dutch architects of their time.

Since 1822 the intimate Mauritshuis has housed the Royal Cabinet of Paintings, one of the most famous collections in the world.

Jan Steen, 1626 – 1679
'The way you hear it is the way you sing it'

A brilliant collection
The core of the collection consists of masterpieces from the Dutch Golden Age, including paintings by Vermeer, Rembrandt, Steen and Frans Hals. But there is much more to see. The works on permanent display provide a magnificent panorama of Dutch and Flemish art from the 15th century to the 18th century, from Flemish primitives to sunlit landscapes, from biblical characters to meticulous still lifes and from calm interiors to humorous genre pieces.
